

Platform furniture. On the left is a coach watering tank. These were kept at major stations and could be connected to a coach. The latter's water tanks were then filled by turning the handle. On the right is a set of movable steps. These can be wheeled around and were used to reach relatively inaccessible parts of platform canopies. These two images also show the earlier style of canopy framing at the north end (left) and the later utilitarian steel structure added to the south (right)
